This condition shall be without prejudice to the right of the Anderson Auction Company to enforce the contract with the buyer, without such re-sale.

THE ORIGINAL CONCEPTION OF "LES PIERROTS."

MEASURING HEIGHTS.

The artist wrote, "the picture was painted in an old garden near Peekskill, which I used as an outdoor studio. The incident occurred while I was working there. The girls were my own children and almost of the same height. They had heard discussion as to which was the taller, and determined to settle the matter for themselves; going to the garden they selected lilies tall enough for their purpose, one placing herself against the plant while the other noted the bud or blossom which would just rest on her head. The incident was so well adapted for a picture that I made a drawing right there."

TIME—FOUR GENERATIONS.

"Shadow and Sun for Every One, as the Years Roll on."

This characteristic work of the popular English painter is a sequel to a picture entitled "For Weal or Woe" which Mr. Sadler finished in 1897. The same people, in the costumes of 1820, appear in a sunny garden, only grown a little older, with the addition of the infant offspring who represents the fourth generation of the interesting group of old-time figures. The artist has given the closest attention to details of costume, and to the china and silver on the table spread for the afternoon meal, also to the beds of flowers enclosed within the brick walls of the garden. The work was shown at the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1902.
